O'Meara and State Department officials also urged a change in present law to permit the Defense Department rather than the president to decide when an emergency is sufficiently serious to permit additional aid to bolster Internal strength.

O'Meara said that "on the average, it takes three weeks to process a presidential determination (of an emergency) in Washington, after the (Latin) government has made its appeal to the ambassador and the ambassador has gotten to Washington."

O'Meara said that a decision can take much longer because "the president can be on a trip." The administration has asked a removal of the $55 million ceiling on military aid to Latin American countries, but O'Meara recalled earlier statements by Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara that he would be content to keep the ceiling but raise it to $60 million.

Independence Day

Some historians insist the primary basis for the American Revolution was the economic pressure put upon the colonists by England. It is true that restrictions as to production and procurement of goods, conceived by England as necessary to the mercantile empire, aroused the colonists to revolt. But the theories behind man's rights and the reasons for government rationalized their rebellion.

The Declaration of Independence, an unofficial document as far as the United States is concerned, expressed the philosophies behind the American Revolution in simple and clear terms. The ideas are not present in the Constitution in so many words; but the philosophy expressed in the Declaration was necessary for the writing and thought behind the Constitu-

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

The background for these ideas was the doctrine of natural rights, developed principally in England and expressed to some extent in common law. This doctrine held simply that man, by being man, had rights from God which no government, no tyrant, no individual or group could rightfully deny him. In practise these rights might be taken away but not justly. It obviously follows that no person or organization, even of government, could grant inalienable rights either. It could only set up machinery to see that they were not denied.

It is on this philosophical ground that our beginnings in government differ so greatly from that of both communistic and socialistic countries. The government is essential to them to give the rights; it obviously must then be almost worshipped, it is beholden to no constituents, it almost takes over the old authority of the divine right of kings.

Government, in the belief of the men who wrote the Declaration, is no sacred cow, untouchable and unchangeable. It is merely an instrument by which man can further his growth and better his conditions. And the pursuit of happiness, which can include a high standard of living, follows both life and liberty.

The Declaration of Independence is a remarkable document of as great importance to Americans today as it was to the colonists who were justifying their rebellion. It should be read and re-read every Fourth of July.

Danger Is Never Far Away

In the midst of the excitement of the long holiday weekend, it is good to give a thought to the record accidental death toll of the Memorial Day period.

Over the Memorial Day weekend there were 463 deaths in traffic, 39 in boating accidents, 62 by drowning and 115 in miscellaneous mishaps. This total of 679 is a record. Nevertheless it is not so very different from the casual everyday toll taken by accidents. Just to compare the figures, the Associated Press kept a 102hour non-holiday accident report from 6 p. m. Friday, May 12, to midnight, May 16, and in that time there were 341 traffic fatalities. This is to be compared with the 463 over the Memorial Day weekend.

Thus it appears that the accidental death toll goes right on day by day whether we have holidays or not. The Institute of Life Insurance has warned that between 30,000 and 35,000 persons will die in accidental deaths in the United States this summer unless Americans put more emphasis on safety during the 1961 vaca-

The institute makes it clear that one cannot avoid accidents by merely staying home. In fact, the home is the second most dangerous place to be this summer. It is second only to the street or the highway. About 8,000 persons will be killed by accidents occurring in the home and about one-third of them will be due to accidental falls.

The Institute points out that deaths normally run from four to eight per cent higher during the summer than in other seasons of the year. One of the most important causes of death is water activities. During this summer drownings will take over 3,000 lives and more than half of them will be persons under 20 years of age. In addition, about half of all boating accidents happen during the summer. Over 800 persons are expected to die in boating accidents, including about 700 drownings caused by the capsizing of small craft, 10 or 20 due to accidental fails on boat ladders and decks, and about 10 or so due to explosions or machinery accidents.

There are many other kinds of accidents but human ingenuity appears to have limitless means of discovering new and novel ways of bringing fatalities to vacationing people. But the most important are those relating to the home, the highways and the water. This is the time to take due precaution against them. People need not deceive themselves that they of Happiness. will be safe if they avoid travel on holidays. Almost any weekend is as bad as the other. No one will be safe unless he

Give the Horses Back to the Amish

Not long ago the Internal Revenue Service seized three horses of an Amish farmer in Pennsylvania, sold them at auction for $308 to satisfy a Social Security tax claim against him. A great many Americans were astounded at the highhanded performance of the federal tax collectors although quite obviously they were acting according to the law and had no alternative.

Now Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D - Pa.) has introduced a bill in Congress which would exempt from the payment of Social Security taxes any self-employed person whose religious views forbid participation in such welfare program. The Amish have religious scruples against the insurance program and it was for this reason that the farmer had refused to pay even to the extent of giving up the horses needed on his farm. Under Sen. Clark's bill, those wishing exemption would be permitted to file a certificate indicating self-employment and adherence to a recognized church or religious sect which forbids its members from accepting benefits of the kind provided by Social Security.

Sen. Clark pointed out that approximately 3.000 persons might be affected by the bill. He indicated, however, that so far as the Amish people are concerned their refusal to buy insurance has not resulted in their becoming public charges. He said their religion requires them to take care of their own and they do it.

He intimated that the success of this bill would indicate that Congress believes in "legislating with compassion." The Amish are small in number, he said, and thus are without political influence. Most people agree that the Amish and others similarly situated should be exempt from the provisions of the Social Security law.

Seeking a Lost World

In 1909, the English explorer viewed a high plateau in Central South America of which he wrote: "Time and the foot of man have not touched these summits. They stood like a lost world. Imagination could picture the vestiges of an age long vanished.

"Isolated monsters from the dawn of history might still roam these heights . . ."

In 1912, A. Conan Doyle, who had read the words quoted above, wrote his book, "The Lost World," in which he actually populated the area with dinosaurs.

Today Mr. and Mrs. Dana Lamb of Corona Del Mar, Calif., are on their way to South America to explore this so-called lost world if they can find it. Mr. and Mrs. Lamb are experienced explorers and adventurers. They traveled the length of Mexico in a canoe in 1938, and on foot in 1941 sought the "lost city of Mayas" near the Guatemala border. They are well known for their adventure stories and lectures about their trips.

They believe that the "lost world" lies somewhere in Southwest Brazil near the Bolivian border at the head waters of the Rio Verde, a tributary of the Amazon. They do not expect to find dinosaurs or any other prehistoric monsters roaming the plateau. They probably believe, like Col. P. H. Fawcett, the English explorer who first wrote about the plateau, that the foot of man had not yet touched those

That is sufficient incentive for them to undertake this extremely difficult journey for there are some people who simply cannot stand to know that there is one place left in the world which has not been visited by man.

Mr. and Mrs. Lamb are such people. They now are out to reduce by just a few more square miles the area on this earth which still has not been visited by dependence is protected by every means known to science. For nearly 150 years, however, it was the most traveled, handled, and innocently abused of America's state papers.

Contrary to popular belief, the Declaration was only adopted on July 4, 1776, and not signed that day. The document in the Archives Building did not even exist then. Congress, on July 19, ordered it to be engrossed from much-edited Jeffersondrafted charter.

Signatures Added

When the parchment was ready, on August 2, 1776, it was signed by John Hancock as President of Congress, and the 50 or so members present for the session. The other signatures were added later.

A curious fact - due chiefly to changes in Congress after the Declaration was approved - is that not all the men who voted for the document signed it, and that some signers never had the chance to vote for it.

From its earliest days the Declaration led a precarious has gone abroad that this comlife. It was among other official papers transported in a men, which is not so. "light wagon" when Congress fled from Philadelphia to Baltimore in December, 1776.

Nelson Appointees Control Conservation

MADISON - Gov. Nelson has achieved a goal he has talked about since he announced his ecutive officer of the state government 36 1/2 years ago jority on the conservation commission. It remains to be seen, however, that the fact four commissioners out of six who hold their offices by virtue of the governor's nomination will make any real change in the outlook, the policy, or the actual performance of what is perhaps the most popular bureaucracy ir the expanding state govern-

Such doubt as is being expressed is not unfair or premature criticism of the governor's new men, or the pair of commissioners installed by the governor's decision two years earlier. It is pertinent to note, however, that the governor's first appointments have made no especially spectacular or significant motions for change during their 2-year tenure, and that the governor's most recent norninees said nothing to indicate any exceptional approaches to their assignments when they were invited to testify at a recent hearing before the state

THE COMPLAINT

There is a good chance that Nelson's original indictment of the conservation administration was based upon the natural desire of a minority party candidate - as he imagined himself in 1958 - to attract the attention of an indifferent electorate on an issue that might be popular. Surely there are signs among the Ne'son entourage that they feel the Nelson conservation department criticisms in 1958 contributed heavily to his comparatively narrow margin of victory in both elections. But considered at its face value, the governor has been saving fairly often that the conservation commission has defaulted on its main responsibility of long-range planning and policy making, that it has immersed itself in administrative detail and trivia and has never permitted itself to consider the fundamentals, that, in short, it has overlooked the forest for the trees. It is a fair criticism, there doubtless are many men who have no special sympathy for the Democratic idea in polities who have been disappointed at the performance of the conservation commission in recent But it also is fair to ask

THE FICTION

There is a fiction in state government and politics that these part-time boards and commissions in administrative agencies run things. The fact is that they do not, either in the conservation commission, or in the universities and colleges, in the department of agriculture, the board of health, the welfare board, or the others. In the nature of things, these ostensible governing hoards cannot effectively direct affairs when they come to the capitol for a few hours a month and deal mostly with the materials that the department directors put on the

The reality is that the professional office-holders rule.

Perhaps it was possible at one time for a part-time board to assemble occasionally to rule a small department. It is not possible in a day when these agencies have grown to ten or more times their original size and power. The substance has vanished. The form remains.

If your daughter is a good student and has other requisites for "sorority material", such as character, personality, background, chances are that she will be noticed and investigated before she is asked to "come to the Alpha Zeta house for tea." Silence and patience are the best virtues to maintain in a case like this. It is also possible that some alumna may know your daughter or even know about her and would think that your daughter would fit in well with the sorority. In that case, she would write a letter of recommendation, suggesting that they look over Mary Smith as a prospective member.

Kennedy's Peace Corps program. The issue is to what extent the federal government may make use of established American missionary groups overseas to carry out the humanitarian objectives of the corps.

threatening to plague President!

BY JULES LOH

R. Sargent Shriver, director of the corps, has said the new program should supplement, not supplant, existing governmental and private aid efforts. In fact, of the 40-million budget which the corps: has submitted to Congress for approval, $26 million would be sepnt through universities and voluntary agencies.

There Are Skeptics

But Shriver has made it clear the government should see to it "that no activities inconsistent with the Peace Corps were carried on, such as religious proselytizing or propagandizing."

Still, some staunch church-state separationists are skeptical that groups which have been working abroad for both religious and humanitarian purposes could put aside their religious motives in order to use government funds and Peace Corpsmen in their

Chicago Pair Found Slain In Farm Home

Sheriff's Office Called by One of Six Children

WAUSAU (AP)-The bodies of middle-aged Chicago man and his estranged wife who had been shot to death were found today in her mother's farm home by sheriff's officers who were summoned by one of the couple's six children. Marathon County Sheriff Louis Gianoli said he had not yet been able to determine who fired the shots that killed Heinz Mursa, 44, and his wife, Irene, 32.

The sheriff said he was investigating a statement by a relative of the dead woman that a third person, identified only as a Chicago man, had telephoned the farm home and threatened to kill both Mursa and his wife. Found in Living Room

Sheriff Gianoli said Mrs. Mursa had been shot in the right temple and the breast, and Mursa in the right temple. They were found lying in front of the davenport in the living room of the old farm home of Mrs. Mursa's mother. Mrs. Bertha Beilke, in the Town of Maine, eight miles north of Wausau.

'Dual Intensity' Dims Blinkers at Night; Plan Other Changes

U. S. automobile and lamp manufacturers are cooperating in the development of a new automotive safety signal system that increases daytime visibility of vehicle signal lights without making them too bright at night.

The joint traffic safety project was announced recently by the Automobile Manufacturers Association.

Key to the new system is a "dual intensity" principle applied to rear turn and stop signals, the AMA said. Daylight brightness of signals in the new system is two to four times higher than those in present use. When headlights are turned on, however, rear signal brightness is lowered to prevent uncomfortable glare for following drivers. Front turn signal intensity is not lowered at night since these lights must be seen against the brightness of headlights.

The dual intensity principle also will be applied to the turn signal indicator lights that tell the driver a turn signal is operating. They will be as much as 10 times brighter in the daytime.

Also under consideration are says Campeau. amber lenses for front turn signals, replacing the usual white light. Tests have shown amber is seen more readily against glar-Recall Ways of ing sunlight reflections and pro-vides greater contrast against Hemingway headlamps at night.
